THE LAST AFFECTING ABSOLUTIONS. Procession of Clergy to the Tomb,

Those in Attendance, and Other Features of the Memorable Obsequies.

Yesterday morning the visils of the guard at the bier of Bishop O'Connor came to a close at an early hour. The church was cleared of worshippers and the committee on reception placed in charge to make arrangement for the grand and solemn closing of Almost simultaneously friends of the deceased and members of every parish in the city made their appearance at the entrance and sought admission, but without avail. The doors up to a certain hour were to be closed to all, save those who came provided with special tickets of admission. The rule was rigidly enforced. Some people were disappointed, but the majority saw the necessity of the injunction and uncomplainingly waited without the doors until the sents specially reserved had been filled, when general admission was allowed to all the cathedral could

The clergy met in the school of the parish, where they vested in black cassocks; sur-plices and black berettas.

The bishops assembled in the parochial residence where they attired themselves, some in purple cassocks and capes, and others in black with the edges trimmed with a cord of At 5 o'clock the priests filed from the school through the throng in front of the entrance to the cathedral. The people made way for them and the line walked with bowed neads and eves bent upon their breviaries into the body of the church. In front of the place reserved for laymen, the clergy found seats. Immediately in front the clergy found seats. Immediately in front of them stood a dais, upon which rested a catafalque drapped in black, on either side of which stood three large lighted tapers. Upon the catafalque the casket was so inclined, and though beyond the sight of people on the floor, the remains were distinctly visible to people in the gallery.

Under the leadership of Key, F. Ruesing of West Point whose scellest tapers.

of West Point, whose excellent singing was greatly appreciated, the solemn office for the dead was chanted, all the clergy taking part the affective service.

At the conclusion of the office the derry flict from the auditorium past the remains of the deceased, the while casting a tender glance at their cestwhile spiritual superior. They then walked through the sanctuary genu-flecting as they passed the tabernacle and disappeared through the south vestry.

They then passed through the parochial residence emerging from the main entrance, each bearing an unlighted waxen taper. They walked in twos, each as before referred to, comning his breviary.

This time, however, the left of the line was followed by the array of visiting prelates. Some of the latter were young, others very old and feeble. This was especially noticeable in the case of the venerable Archbishop Kenrick, who, with his eighty-four years, bowed form and gray hairs, brought up the end of the procession. He was ac-companied by an iron-gray-haired man, full features, evincing considerable strength of character. This was Vicar General Brady of St.Louis, who, it is said, is one of the clergymen who has been considered by Rome as a te successor to Birhop O'Connor. Within the cathedral the clergy took the within the cathedral the clergy took the seats they had previously occupied, while the bishops were escorted to the oratories and seats which had been grouped for them around the catafalque. Two of them occupied prominent seats in the sanctuary. These were Archbishop Keurick who occupied the archberiseomal throne immediately. pied the archiepiscopal throne immediately opposite that used by Bishop O'Connor in life. The throne of the latter was tenantless and draped with crope.

The other who appeared prominently was Archdishop Ireland of St. Paul, who occupied a sent on the south side of the sanctuary, his iron gray hair, regular and determined features attracting considerable attention. When priests and prelates had taken their seats. Archibishop Ryan of Philadelphia, the old-time friend of the deceased, and perhaps the most eloquent pulpit orator in the country, attired in a black cope with silver trimming, lace surplice, black soutane and white ming, lace surplice, black soutane and white mitre entered the sanctuary from the south vestry, to act as celebrant of the mass. He was attended by the following clergymen:

Ansistant priest, Very Rev. F. Choka; deacon of the mass, Rev. William Kelle; subdeacon of the mass, Rev. J. Jennette; deacon of honor, Rev. F. Fitzgeraid; subdeacon of honor, Rev. F. Freificus; book bearer, Rev. F. Barrett; candle bearer, Rev. F. Brophy; censer bearer, Rev. F. O'Toole; holy water and boat bearer Rev. F. Walliace; afolytes, Rev. F. bearer, Rev. F. Waliace; acolytes, Rev. F. Glauber and Rev. F. Schoof; masters of ceremonies, Rev. F. Carroll and Rev. F.

The celebrant and principal attendants approached the foot of the altar, and simul-taneously the organ, under the direction of Mr. John Schenk, and the choir intoned the first bars of the Gregorian requiem, and the mass had formally begun.

Shortly befor the epistle, the clergy lighted their tapers, and at the same time about 100 extra candles upon the altar were also

The scene at this moment, especially from the gallery, was most affecting. The altar of cold white marble glistened beneath the rays of the lighted tapers while parti-colored light streamed through the beautiful stained-glass window behind. In the midst of this radiance, which was not unmingled with this radiance, which was not unmingled with clouds of aromatic incense from swinging thurifors, were disposed the sombredlad celebrant and ministers, their vesture contrasting strongly with the purple capes, berettas and rich lace surplices, gold neck chains and pectoral crosses of the bishops. In the middle of the picture, and slightly without the sancturry rail, lay the bishop's remains, surrounded by men of the same titular rank in the church. Contrasting with purple of these was the white lace of the priests, and this in turn with the black of the pall bearers who sat immediately behind the clergy. Every nead was bent in prayer, except those of the invited friends, to many of whom the ceremonies and the spectacle was as strange as it monies and the spectacle was as strange as it was elaborate and inspiring.

The sombre decorations of the church which covered wall and in greater part the windows also, and which have heretofore been described in these columns, [added greatly to the solemnity of the speciacle which will long remain in the memory of those who beheld it.

Archbishop Ryan acted as celebrant at the request of the deceased and in his singing sas noticed almost the same sweetness of roice which characterized him in early life. This sweetness was tinged with a plaintive

This sweetness was tinged with a plaintive cadenes which betrayed the feeling of personal becavement which the great orator sustained in the decease of his friend.

At the offertory, the great vocal effort on the part of the choir was made. It consisted of a quartette sung by Messrs, Kinzie, Provo, Burkley and Lumbard. The piece was arranged for the occasion by Mr. John Schenk, the organist. A more tender and sweet and yet more tearfully solenn composition, it would be difficult to imagine. It was most appropriate to the occasion, and was sung appropriate to the occasion, and was sung with exquisite delicacy and feeling. It was mainly plantssime, and so delicate, so distinct and so captivating the closing notes that many of them lingered in the ear after the ag had ceased. Abuse lasted about an hour, the absence of a sermon being most pronounced. There were grouped around the bier men eminent for their scholarly attainments and noted for their cloquence. To them it would have been a merited honor and a fraternal pleasure to have extelled the virtues of the deceased. Such an effort would have been appreciated indeed had been desired by the multi-But the burning words of eulogy had been estopped by one of the latest requests of

At the close of the mass came the formal solution by four of the prelates. Each o these was attired in a large function cope with silver trianning with a white mitre upon his head. Each encircled the casked twice, sprinkling it with holy water in the first and incensing it at the second round. Each absolution required about five min-utes, the responses being made in unison by the attending clerry.

The first absolution was given by Archbishop Kenrick, the second by Archbishop Ireland, the third by Bishop Fink and the last by Archbishop Ryan.

The verses were intoned by each prelate, the singing of both Bishops Fink and Ryan being most sweet and plaintive.

The casket was then closed and tenderly

He was one of the very first to take up a home on the Cathelle colony in Greely nty in this state which was organized by bishop. He came as the representative of the successful farmers of that colony who have now capacious and comfort-able homes on the prairie. Frank Rooney was another visitor from O'Connor and Max frim came from Spaulding, an adjoining colony town to express the profound regret of the people over the death of the founder of their present homes.

For an alterative and tonic it has never been equalled."

OMAHA, June 3, 1890 .- To the Honorable Board of Communissioners for Douglas County, Neb., Gentlemen: In compliance with your request, I herewith submit final estimate showing the balance due Mesars Ryan & Walsh, contractors for the new hospital buildings. In making out this estimate, your auditor Mr. Evans, has kindly produced all the papers on file needed and has assisted me in arriving at the proper amounts etc.

I also find that Messrs, Ryan & Waish have been paid for grading and excavating the sum of $19,281.10, but this work was done before any superintendent had been ap-pointed, and was not allowed on regular esti mates. I have no means of ascertaining how much, if any, of it should have been done under the general contract, and for this reason I have not charged any of this amount as paid, either on account of general contract or as extras. THEY FAILED TO APPEAR. Meetings of County, City and Police

Officials Go by Default Three important committee meetings called for 10 o'clock yesterday morning at the court house went by default owing to the nonattendanceof those who should have been present.

There was the matter of providing a stone pile to work p isoners, which was to be set-tled at the board of public works office, but no meeting could be held for reason stated, although Mr. the Balcome and Councilman Donnelly were on hand. Commissioner Anderson was the absence. It was learned, however, that the committee will probably recommend advertising for bids for the prisoner labor and letting out the work of the jailbirds, somewhat after the fashion of state prison contracts, the only difference being, perhaps, that the contracts will be for the work actually done instead of for the time of the prisoners as is the case in most state prisons. The committee anticipates, it was further learned, considerable difficulty in getting a location within reasonable distance from the county jail for doing the work. The plan of adver-tising for bids will, it is thought, aid in solving this difficulty.

Another meeting which failed to connect was that of the county commissioners as a committee on construction, called for the third unsuccessful time to consider that final estimate on the new hospital. Billiam Turner came in at a quarter after 10, and after play-ing several games of craps on the chairman's desk and winning every game he went away to jubilate. His opponent was a backwoods constituent. No sooner had Turner gone than Anderson appeared and said that as Dick O'Keefe had the papers "in the case!" within his lostom pocket and had failed to show up he would take the responsibility of adjourning the meeting to some other time. County Auditor Evans, who was expected to play some sort of an unknown hand in the proceedings, was seen and said:

"If think it was pretty well understood, though not definitely so, that the committee on construction wouldn't meet until some time in the afternoon. Coots told 'em he didn't think he could get any report until 2 or 3 o'clock and probably later."

"Just what is Mr. Coots expected to report on?" Mr. Evans was asked. "That's a puzzler, perhaps. I don't see, however, that he can report on anything else but just as to whether Ryan & Walsh have finished their contract—cleaned to hospita work all up -or not.'

The third meeting that failed to materialize was the council board of equalization on the Tenth street viaduct. Not a soul of them was on hand. Matters did not result any more favorably in the afternoon. The commissioners as-sembled, with the exception of Mr. O'Keeffe, and afterwaiting until nearly 4 o'clock for the chairman of the committee on construction the board adjourned until Saturday at 2

It was vaguely rumored that there was method in Mr. O'Keeffe's continued absence, and that he would like to have the board necept the hospital without any assistance from The conneilmen also failed to appear as a board of equalization. Messrs. Shriver, Blumer, Wheeler and Lowry were on hand, but the balance of the council were conspicuous by their absence.

The "No. 9" is not an old machine improved upon, but is an entirely new machine, and the Grand Prize at Paris was awarded it as the grandest advance in sewing machine mechanism of the age. Those who buy it can rest assured, there
